Frag. of Neck of "Altar Two"
Coarse Pot
Cab. Dr. 2 x/1939

Section ? maxi dim. 0.10; T. 0.014

Local red clay; core fired black; no paint.
Frag. shows two sections divided by broad raised band with rounded edges. The lower section begins to round out into the shoulder.
Upon it, a little below the band, is a horizontal row of small incised circles (made with reed?). On the upper edge of the band is a row of short incised parallel lines, at the left oblique, at the right (under the design) vertical. On the upper section in the center a tree is incised; it consists of a single vertical line indicating the trunk, toward the top of which curving lines (branches) project to right and left. To the right of this tree, sketch of a building or wall is incised; it is broken off at the right. This structure consists of a long horizontal rectangle divided lengthwise into two bands, the lower further divided into squares, the upper marked by X's.

Light red clay, with white sand.
Broad horizontal band extends straight out apparently from lip of pot; this ends in thick rounded edge, from which handle proper depends extending down to shoulder (?) in gentle curve.
This part of the handle consists of two adjacent rolls twisted to simulate rope, bordered on either side by a plain band. At the base of the pres. fragment, is attached a molded head, and shoulders (?), of a woman; the face, much worn, is oval in shape with hair drawn straight back over head. At neck, chipped
