33-261b	R-11-a	SE	The upper half of Stela 45; See P.N. Prel. Paper No. 2 for drawing.
33-262	R-16	NE	Front pier at extreme left, the small stone column now rests on the floor level; cache of eccentric flints came from vicinity of wire pin (right). The column was behind this point, partly down the rear slope. For this cache of flints see 33-143, the right group.
33-263	R-16	NE	The one pier identified - based on contours here at the top, it is a central pier.

In foreground, Maler's "sacrificial column Morley's "Altar 6", renamed Stela 46. The piece at right is the piece known to Maler and Morley. A small piece is fitted to it at left end. This plain piece, together with the butt (probably of this monument) were found on platform near center. Behind - another butt of a round column-like stone, moved here by us from just NE of the NE end of the stela-platform in front of Morley's "drain" between Strs. R-5 and R-6

NE
